INTRO

In a letter of condolence to the interim president of Venezuela Nicolás Maduro, Iranian president Mahmud Ahmadinejad says he believes that Chávez will one day return to earth and help Jesus and the perfect Imam Mahdi when they will finally establish peace and justice in this world. Those are certainly very interesting statements by Ahmadinejad. These words of the Iranian president once again unmistakably show that the so-called despots and dictators (among whom Chávez and Ahmadinejad are certainly numbered within Western media) are putting their hopes in something quite different from atomic bombs.

About the death of the statesman Hugo Chávez

mab. The president of Venezuela, Hugo Chávez, died of cancer on March 5, 2013. A little chronicle of the last few years of his life is worth looking into here: On May 1, 2007, Chávez announced that Venezuela would like to resign from the International Monetary Fund as well as from the World Bank. The IMF has a very bad reputation in many countries of South America and is above all known to be an instrument of the US-government that puts the countries south of the Río Grande in social chains. The billions of debts of many Latin-American countries which they owe to the IMF remain one of the biggest barriers in the fight against poverty. Chávez had the vision to establish a South-America Bank as a regional lender and opponent to the IMF. "We will not have to go to Washington anymore, to nobody." This is what Chávez promised to his compatriots – and to the rest of South America. At the beginning of April 2007, Venezuela announced that, as a precaution, it had paid back all its debts to both organizations to have no liabilities with the IMF and the World Bank anymore. That was an important step towards Venezuela's independence. There are voices that accused the US of wanting to eliminate Chávez because of these actions such as resigning from the IMF and the nationalization of the oil industry as well as the intention not to trade oil in dollars anymore. Chávez himself said not too long ago: "Would it be surprising if the US developed a technology that causes cancer? That nobody knows about it and we only find out about it in 50 years? [...] It is very odd that we, all presidents of several countries, who are critical to the USA, have cancer. " If this is not a speculation but reality, it should not take 50 years until the truth about it comes to light.

Brave heroes versus US-imperialism

rs. When on March 5th 2013 the message went through the airwaves that Hugo Chávez Friás had died of cancer, I was touched deep in my heart. When I look back on all the years gone by and how this man was vilified by the mainstream media, yes even down-right maligned and despised; it is due to this that I came to the conclusion that he was a hero. In fact it looks fairly suspicious to me that all those statesmen who show themselves critical regarding the USA and Israel are being labeled by the media as being dictators, despots and tyrants. - But who are in fact those statesmen and governments who really intend to install a dictatorial system of government? Or what else would be the underlying aim of the US - "Patriot Act" (which had been established right after 9/11) other than to anchor the total surveillance by law? Or what else is the ESM in Europe other than an outstanding instrument to lead people step by step into dictatorship, even slavery? Doesn't it speak volumes that already on March 6th 2013, just one day after the death of Chávez, the US-American financed think tank American-Enterprise-Institute (AEI) declared, that the USA immediately have to reinforce the US-interests in Venezuela!

That is why we wish that the current interim president Nicolás Maduro will have the courage and fortitude to set up a successful fight against the imperial power claims of the USA.

The reeducation of the German nation

bm. "In 1945, reeducation started in Germany and since then large parts of the population have accepted that they have to greet the "Gessler hats" of the occupying forces. Professor Günter Zehm, once the head of culture of the German newspaper "Welt" and now columnist of the "Junge Freiheit", described what is written on the hats:

1. The crimes done by the Germans and in the name of the Germans are absolutely unique and without example and comparability in history and always will be.

2. All Germans were "released" even if they were beaten to death, starved to death, raped, jailed, dispelled, led away or if they have been pressed under communist dictatorship.

3. The one who doubts or qualifies one of these two sentences by showing so-called facts or sources, is a fascist and a social outlaw.

The completely unjustified demonization of the German nation will only come to an end if the entire context of the First and the Second World War comes to light. The time has come for a comprehensive description of what happened at that time. The unilateral description of the victorious nations of the war could not ever really convince."

What the media don't tell

ck. A Swiss radio broadcast on SRF 1 (echo of time) reported concerning India (Punjab), that hundreds of farmers committed suicide because they are no longer able to sustain their living by the earnings of their crops. These suicides are often neither reported nor published by the authorities or the media; lest it become apparent throughout India what truly happens in those very fruitful and wealthy parts of their country. However SRF1 does not even mention a single word about the true reasons for the impoverishment and desperation of those farmers: The fact is, they are forced to buy very expensive Monsanto seeds every year over again because the (Monsanto) harvest is deprived of its capability to reproduce itself. It is an enormous greed for profit at the expense of the poorest. Why do the media remain silent about those facts and why do the officials not intervene?

Eradication of small farms planned?

mab. The MIBA AG (Dairy Association of Basel) asked the dairy farmers in the last few years who of them would want to always deliver the same amount of milk every month throughout the whole year. This is only possible by feeding the cows with tons of expensive concentrate in the wintertime, to yet only get close to the milk yield of the summer (by fresh grass). The MIBA allured the farmers with the rising of the milk quantity delivered for those who decided to take part "voluntarily".

This prompted 10% of primarily large-scale farmers to get on board expecting a faster debt reduction by enlarging their business.

But plenty of them had the severe experience that delivering more milk does not necessarily mean more money. For the higher the delivered quantities of milk, the less is the willingness of buyers to pay an appropriate price for it. Now the MIBA has taken it too far and demands of all dairy farmers to monthly deliver a minimum quantity of milk over the whole year. Otherwise they would not buy their milk anymore. Those who refuse must find their own way to sell their milk. Some of them change their business to suckler cow husbandry or even give up their business altogether, because obstacles are constantly put in their way of leading a reasonable and sustainable farming business. It seems that the dictatorship of corporations, in this case the Dairy Association of Basel together with the EMMI AG, shows itself from its unmasked side, namely how they control the dairy market, thereby aiming at and encouraging the closure of small farms.

"To hell with these set-up games of the political parties!"

brm. In the quarterly appearing journal of the Swiss news agency, Recht+Freiheit were the following interesting quotations from Migros-founder Gottlieb Duttweiler: "The political parties of our country have torn the nation apart. They have killed the real Swiss spirit in politics." "The individual civil rights and liberties exist for the most part only on paper and the typical character of our lives as a nation and state becomes blurred." During his term as a member of the national council in 1948, Duttweiler broke a window pane with two stones at the federal parliament building, because the national council protracted his venture on the subject of the country's supply for more than four years. Duttweiler feared armed conflicts and wanted to urge the people to stockpile food. But Duttweiler's desire was rejected by Parliament. 58 years later (2006) in all Switzerland every food silo was torn down and the storage regulations eliminated.

Today, more people than ever fear war and civil insurrections in Europe. Switzerland has eight million inhabitants but is not able to feed them in the event of a crisis.

Good advice – emergency supply!

Closing Point •

"Where might the solution come from, if the government is corrupt and the masses are degenerate and slack? The answer is simple: The attempt to rescue our civilization from decay can only be successful if there are sufficient people who engage themselves courageously and decisively for the common good. That requires a civil courage, though, that stems from a noble image of humanity. It is pleasing and encouraging that there are such people [V&C couriers], who are willing to accept any inconvenience and resistance on behalf of a better, juster and healthier world. Thanks to all those good spirits."
