INTRO

Manipulation is a daily reality - with a power which is growing stronger day by day; and humanity should become conscious of this for the sake of their existence. For a long time already we let ourselves - sometimes even willingly - be led by the power of manipulation.... Just think of the whole universe of advertisements, all the different kinds of fashions and trends. But all fun ends, when there is manipulative trickery on the level of politics - science - media - or even military. Here humanity becomes a victim of power- obsessed manipulators. This edition again shows just some smallest peaks of immeasurable, gigantic icebergs, which are hidden underneath.

How does one break the power of the manipulators? First of all through investigative information work, by bringing hidden facts to the light! "Peoples become aware how dramatically just now the situation in the Ukraine is being manipulated!" But already new, undreamt worse forms of manipulation are coming up. Woe to us, if we do not set limits to science in the right time. You will hear more about that topic in this edition.

Demonstration in Kiev - silence in the media hub/clm. For weeks now, the Ukraine is plagued by violent protests with the goal of forcing president Yanukovich to step down and to pressure the nation into joining the EU. Western media outlets make it seem as though the protesters make up a large part of the people of Ukraine. Reports from citizens of the country themselves, however, draw a very different picture. From the city of Dnipropetrovsk, they report that everything had been peaceful and no one wanted to support the opposition, until one day, demonstrators ready to use violence were brought in with large buses, making it seem as if the city's inhabitants were displeased with their government. Other Ukrainians testify that the majority of their people is anything but supportive of the political opposition. There was a peaceful demonstration of January 23rd, 2014 that remained completely ignored by Western media. Thousands of demonstrators surrounded the US embassy in Kiev. The group "Kievans for a Clean City" called for an end of the violence and blames the US for instigating and stirring up the riots.

One of their leaders, Ivan Protsenko, says "The USA are behind what is going on in Kiev right now. They are financing it. But it has to stop. That's why we are here, to tell the whole world: USA - stop! USA - we need peace."

Why are events such as this demonstration rarely being reported on? We need to ask the question whether our popular media are used as instruments to move forward or shut down certain political developments. What else could explain their stubborn silence when it comes to voices not in line with the general mainstream. Who are the driving forces behind such uniform news agencies? V&C discusses such questions and sheds light on crucial events and connections that are being ignored by the mainstream media. You can help by spreading V&C wherever possible!

Pro-Israeli lobby group AIPAC demands further sanctions against Iran ts. In the interim agreement on Iran's nuclear program in November 2013, Iran obligated itself to freezing its nuclear program. In return, the sanctions against Iran should be loosened. Now the influential, American, pro-Israel lobby AIPAC (American Israel Public Affairs Committee) is pushing US senators to pass a bill demanding new sanctions against Iran. The fact that AIPAC has already threatened many US senators with the withdrawal of their support in the upcoming elections if the bill is not passed, proves the strong influence that AIPAC has on American politics.

It is apparent that further sanctioning Iran would mean breaking the nuclear agreement. Analysts such as the publicist Gordon Duff warn that the Israeli-demanded sanctions in the end not only concern Iran but America itself, as well as the rest of the world. Breaking the agreement will, in his opinion, create dangerous tensions and conflicts which will in turn further a world-wide redistribution of power.

Radio-controlled cockroach on the way

dm. A totally new creation on the American toy market makes it possible to take control over a living being: the radio controlled cyborg* cockroach. It reacts to electrical impulses that are emitted by a small, backpack-like processor placed on its back which are led via electrodes to the insect’s antennae. The bug gets the impression that it is about to walk into an obstacle which it would rather run away from. This makes it run in the direction that you tell it to per App or radio control. The first ever of this species was made in 1997 and further research is in full swing. The goal is to soon have legions of these so-called “RoboRoaches” controlled and used in many different areas. If mankind’s drive and hunger for power and control has already made it possible to control these living beings, are they going to stop at humans?

*“Cyborg” implies the use of electronic, programmable implants in living organisms.

Mind control: US plans new brain implants with remote control

ap. Non-military neuroimplants for deep brain stimulation (DBS) have been used to treat neurological and psychological problems as early as the 1980s. There are already between 85,000 and 100,000 people living with DBS implants today. While DBS is now being widely used, many aspects of the way it works remain unknown. The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) has announced a new research program called “systems-based neurotechnology for emerging therapies”(SUBNETS) in November 2013. Its goal is to directly influence people's psychological conditions utilizing brain implants. The technology is supposed to measure and analyze brain activity in real time. Scientists are trying to scan the brain and look for unwanted anomalies that they could then take care of remotely using the implant. There are plans of using the technology on soldiers that are suffering from anxiety or depression on the battlefield. Such "disorders" could then be disposed of from a distance. If this research were successful and the brain implants were to be used on a broad scale, then the responsible military officers would possess a powerful human weapon surely not safe from abuse. Illegal operations against domestic protests for example could be carried out and coordinated more easily.

USA – using wars to establish military bases and superpower?

bk. With the help of an intricate web of politics, military and defense industry, the USA have built a network of approximately 1’000 US military bases across many countries and continents. Most of these military bases were founded during or after a war. Libya is the newest example. After the Second Gulf War in 1991, the USA established a permanent military presence in the Middle East, not unlike 50 years before in Europe and in the Far East and in many other countries. The radicalization and militarization of the government and the people is the immediate effect - anywhere where US troops settle down on a long-term basis and intervene in domestic political conflicts. Since terrorists could be practically anywhere, the USA has found in its war on terror a doctrine (political focus) that can literally legitimize their military presence anywhere in the world.

The Swarm

For a long time, science has asked itself: Who steers swarms of birds or schools of fish who do not have a leader? Swarm expert Jens Krause of Berlin showed that people can also form swarms: If a relatively small group changes their course – the threshold lies at about 5-10% - the rest quickly follow those who run ahead. If there are two fractions that are going different directions, then the mass is pulled automatically towards the larger group. This happens without a word, simply by adapting to what the others are doing. Right now we see the mass running after those who manipulate them with media into a destructive selfishness on all levels. But on the bottom line: There are only a few who own the mass media. Let us uncover their foul motives and intentions and together set up what is good! As soon as we are the larger group, it will make people aspire the good together with us.
